THE NEW ATLANTIS.

To build an island in the sea seems a preposterous thing to most persons, but by next spring the undertaking will be an accomplished fact. This new Atlantis, now preparing to be built in the Atlantic Ocean, will be situated about eleven miles from the Long Island shore and about seventeen miles east of the Navesink Highlands. The first of the series of buildings to be erected will rest on large iron cylinders, filled solid with cement, and with their lower ends buried in the sand a sufficient depth to guarantee their remaining there for all time. The Casino will contain a large number of rooms for hotel purposes with every convenience, and furnished luxuriously; will have large piazzas, extensive public promenades, dining rooms, kitchens, lavatories, &c. Steam heat and electricity for lighting purposes will be used in every room and department. The Casino will be open during the entire year. Steamers will ply between Atlantis and New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City during stated hours of the day and night, making the trip in about one and one-half hours.

The object of locating Atlantis at so great a distance from the shores of the United States is for the purpose of securing a resort where the public may obtain the same benefit from the ocean air as would be realized by a transatlantic voyage and at the same time avoid the unpleasant consequences of seasickness. Atlantis will prove to be one of the most popular sanitariums in the world. The buildings will be entirely of glass, tiling, cement, iron, steel, and other metals, thus rendering them fire-proof. The main floors will be situated far above the sea level, and it would require a wave thirty feet higher than has ever been measured in the Atlantic ocean to even touch the girders of the lower floor. A grand amphitheatre will be located within the main building, the lower or principal floor of which will accommodate about 10,000 people and the galleries about 5,000 more. The roof garden will be capable of seating 3,000, and from this place may be viewed a grand marine panorama of ocean steamers and sailing vessels approaching and departing from New York.

The iron work is approaching completion and the braces and supports requisite in the sinking and adjustment of the pillars are being manufactured under the superintendence of competent engineers.

The projector of the enterprise says:
In the construction of the Casino about 900 sections of iron pipe all ten feet in diameter and about one and one-half inches thick will be used. These sections are bolted together by flanges upon the inside. The joints will be absolutely water tight. Each will be 158 feet long, put together in shallow water near a wharf or shore. In the first or bottom section is bolted a false bottom which is water tight. This section is then set into the water. We then bolt on another section eight feet long and when this is done we begin to put up the bracing. This prevents any possible turning over of the cylinders, which are set on their ends. Then we continue to add section after section until we have our sections 90 feet long. We then put our hoisting and pumping engines and other machinery aboard, attach two or three tugs and start for Atlantis. After we have arrived we sink the foundation in the place already located. Each cylinder sinks independently of others, and thus avoids any trouble in striking an uneven surface. When we have located the entire foundation we send a diver down in each cylinder to release the false bottom. After this has been done we dredge out the sand from the inside of the cylinder and its weight forces it down. After each cylinder has descended sixty feet we consider we are far enough. The cylinders are then filled with concrete the entire depth. After we have sunk the cylinders for the foundation, which is ninety feet deep, we continue to add the other section at the top as they are sunk, and we then add enough sections to raise them thirty-eight feet above high tide, which is far above any wave measured in the Atlantic Ocean.
After this has been completed the building is erected on the foundation. Means for landing steamers all the year around have been provided.

The new island will never be a resort for questionable characters. The administration will be strict, and will rigidly enforce rules for the maintenance of order to make the island as safe a place of resort as any that ever existed.

Palpitation of the Heart

Shortness of Breath, Swelling

"For about four years I was trou-
